The universal experience was that the good effects of Kainite were much more marked in 1881, a very dry year, than in 1882, a very wet one. This is contrary to the notion, at first accepted, that an abundance of water in the soil was necessary to diffuse the injurious () chlorides into the deeper layers of the soil. We speak again of the cotton plant which is a sun plant, and loves a hot, not too wet, soil. So far from these chlorides doing harm by their presence, the general belief is that they are the main agents of good, owing to their property of holding moisture. A little of it in the row will cause the soil next to the plants to hold moisture in such a degree as to make it look greasy by contrast. So say the planters. Many attribute the whole good...
