Allori, bade me forth--Methought twas early day--On Fiesole, Glad with light toil, and in the sunbeam s path, We halted for our breath--Oh! the fair city! Cradled, and waking in the vale beneath--Fast, as we gazed, the curtained mist to Heaven, Stirred by its breath, and looped with silver, rose; Earth s shower to the skies--On the high Dome, On every spire, each turret--on the roof Of burgher, noble, all whom Florence holds, Strozzi or Pazzi, on thy roof and mine, Light, the day s guard, stood sentinel.--Alone, We marked it, Lionardo, mid the fires Bright on each thrifty lattice, his proud vane, That doth o ertop the city, was night s perch, Where brooding, still she sat.--Her raven wing O er-shadowed the long pile that i the sun, Like an unwholesome thing, did blacken.--In This presage, as we shouted, I awoke--And thou wert here,...
