THE MILITARY GEOGRAPHY OF THE SOLAR SYSTEM

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 279 x 216 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This a book about military operations in outer space in the middle of the 21st century. Using the experience of military aerospace operations on earth, and the history of NASA space exploration during the past half-century, the author looks into the future to describe what military operations will look like in the middle of the 21st century. The model of military geography is used to explain how both natural and cultural environmental factors will affect military space operations, in the interplanetary medium and on the planetary bodies. On another dimension: it is shown that the battles in space wars will be fought along the electromagnetic spectrum, the gravitational field, and cyberspace. It is likely that by the year 2060 there will be human outposts throughout the solar system. Some of these already exist in the form of the International Space Station, as well as the other spacecraft that are operating within the interplanetary medium and on Mars. As of 2013 there is serious preparation for establishing permanent manned and unmanned stations on Mars, the Moon, and on asteroids. And, the growing population of artificial satellites in near-Earth orbit is continuing to grow. All of these assets will require some sort of military force structure to provide operational security. The threats will come primarily from rouge nation-states, but terrorist organizations will also pose a serious threat. Because of the vastness of even the inner solar system, effective response to such threats will require a permanent presence of distributed military forces in space. The weapon systems and the tactics will be based on the spacecraft and mission tactics that have been developed by NASA during its half-century...
